Promote Individual Potential

Promoting individual potential is not limited to a supervisor/employee relationship. To do this we must see the strengths that others bring to the table and encourage people to step outside of their comfort zone for their own development and possibly for the advancement of the team. People are full of potential, but they may not be in the right role or position to use their strengths effectively. This behavior allows everyone to be a coach in the appropriate situations. We all have the ability to gently push people to live up to their full potential.
